Ernie Anastos, co-anchor:

In case you haven't heard, tonight a new warning about the dangers of smoking to non-smokers. The Environmental Protection Agency is about to release a report on secondhand smoke. Now, according to EPA sources, the study finds secondhand smoke can kill you. In fact, the study reportedly shows that some three thousand non-smokers develop cancer each year simply from breathing other people's smoke. This is the first official government report linking secondhand smoke to cancer.
